FMHA Programs

Loan benefits continue

Farmers and other rural Virginians continue to benefit from the credit assistance provided by the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) of the United States Department of Agriculture.

E. A. Ragland, State Director of FmHA in Virginia, has announced that a total of $206,201,570 has been channeled into Virginia's economy through FmHA loans and grants during the 1980 Fiscal Year ended September 30. This breaks down into the following categories: $83,408,450 in farmer programs, $70,764,320 in single-family housing, $17,230,400 in multi-family housing, $30,941,940 in community programs, and $3,856,460 in business & industry loans guarantees. The 1980 FY activity brings the total FmHA investment in Virginia to $776,838,320 for the most recent three-year period since Ragland became State Director in October of 1977.

FmHA is the only government credit agency that has local service outlets reaching every county in the state and nation. During the past three years, 10 new FmHA county offices have been opened bringing the total to 52 and under the restructuring of 1978, the previous five FmHA districts in Virginia were divided into the present 10, all of which contribute to FmHA's ability to better serve the rural public. This is in keeping with the policies of this administration to provide the most efficient delivery of federal resources to those of greatest need.

One of Ragland's primary emphases has been on equal employment opportunity and under his leadership, significant progress in the field of employment of minorities and women has been made. For many years most of the female employees were in clerical positions; however, there are now 34 women (about 15 percent of total employees) in jobs of a non-clerical nature. These include the following positions: Administrative Officer, Personnel Assistant, Rural Housing Specialist, Assistant District Director, County Supervisor, Assistant County Supervisor, State and District Loan Assistant.

FmHA has the lead role among federal agencies in providing support for rural development. It is the primary government source of farm and housing credit for rural people of modes means who lack other sources. It also administers community facilities which account for approximately 40 percent of all federal loan and grant funds made available nationwide for development of community projects in rural areas.

Since the fall of 1977 FmHA has made $274,624,280 available to Va. farmers in the form of emergency-type credit. The past three years have been a difficult time for farmers attempting to work through the cost price squeeze and many weather-related emergencies. FmHA as saved the livelihood of many farm families who were unable to secure credit from other sources. FmHA's traditional role of providing supervised credit has enabled many farmers to survive the crises during which may would have otherwise been forced out of farming.

Specific plans were made for the 1980 fiscal year through the State Management Plan to target assistance to areas where needs for various types of credit were greatest. This proved to be successful, and will be continued under provisions of the 1981 FY State Management Plan. The allocation of funds is also made taking into consideration use of resources made available through other governmental entities—both federal and state. Great strides are expected from this federal/state/local cooperation. Leveraging of funds and delivery of assistance in a more efficient and timely manner can be expected.

TO REINFORCE THE STUDY of the heavens Mrs. Louella Coleman's 6th grade science class at Appomattox Elementary School constructed a mini-planetarium.
The planetarium was made from heavy plastic, vinyl top, a trash bag, and a fan which was used to inflate the planetarium. Students studied the October sky and selected constellations visible.
The stars were cut from yellow tape and stuck with a trash bag at one end to allow air from the fan to enter. A slit was cut on one side for students to enter and exit. Once the fan is turned on, students are able to relax and study the constellations. Pictured above left to right are David Wingfield, Jeff Scruggs, Cheryl Wooten and Robin LeGrand. The students would like to thank Mr. Bowmann, principal, for helping with the idea.
